1. Data handling. Data handling is a key area of computing because it is central to our everyday use of technology, as well as a valuable tool in a host of specialised areas. With the current focus on programming there is a danger that this aspect will not receive the attention that it should. Will include an examination of various wildlife-related "big data" projects that schools can get involved with.
2. Bring and share*
3. A quick look at decimal and computing prefixes (carried over from last time)
4. E-safety updates

*Colleagues are asked to bring one or two items or ideas to share with everyone. Items could include a useful website, some other good resource, an interesting piece of hardware or software, a classroom activity that went well, a handy tip or technique or anything else that might be useful to support learning in Computing or when ICT is being used to support other subjects.
